WHERE DO WE GO NOW?

Winner of the hotly contested audience award at Toronto, this spirited, shaggy tale of women distracting men from 'religious war' offers an inventive mix of painful experience, wish fulfilment and down-to-earth good sense.

"Women of different religions in a remote Lebanese village band together and invent schemes to prevent their men from killing each other in the intractable religious conflict that surrounds their community. This entertaining and unlikely near-musical tears down stereotypes of women in the Middle East and uses humor to explore serious subjects, with one eye toward Aristophanes' Lysistrata and the other toward Bollywood... Labaki's follow-up to the delicious Caramel [NZIFF08] is refreshing and unflinching. Inhabited by a cast of characters that promote an alternate vision of unity and sisterhood with irreverence and charming simplicity, the film gives short shrift to conventions and taboos." — New Directors/ New Films

"A joyous viewing experience... a story of female sense and solidarity crossing religious divides." — Sandra Hebron, London Film Festival

2011 | Lebanon/France/Italy/Egypt | Director: Nadine Labaki | 100 minutes | In Arabic, English and Russian, with English subtitles
